

Michiko Kuroda received Ph.D. in Electrical Engineering from Waseda University, Tokyo, Japan, in 1978. She became an Associate Professor at Tokyo University of Technology in 1990. She was promoted to a Professor and then was a Dean of the School of Computer Science. Now, she is a Professor Emeritus. She has been a scientific advisor of guidance on the Ministry of Public Management, Home Affairs, Post and Telecommunications in Japan, a vice president of the electronics society of IEICE, a chair of IEEE Japan Council on Women in Engineering, a member of the Board of directors of ACES, a chair of the Technical Committee of Electromagnetic theory of IEEJ. Her research interests are electromagnetic theory, and numerical methods including FDTD and grid generation methods. She is a Fellow of IEICE.